but when the race starts, Denny's horse, Sunny Sue, is so fast that it is hard to follow. Denny's horse, Sunny Sue, is so fast that it is hard to follow. Denny's horse, Sunny Sue, is so fast that it is hard to follow.

They're off! Amid the cheers and enthusiasm of the crowd of sight-seers, Denny rides to victory. Denny's horse, Sunny Sue, has failed - Sunny Sue, has run true to form.

Mrs. Mack rushes proudly to her boy. Denny, proud and happy, tells her that when he sees her in the stand he will win - and win fairly.

APR 23 1925

Directed by J. Edwards
Produced by Blue Grass M. P. Corp

CAST

Denny Mack	-	Bobby Culbertson
Denny's Brother	-	Earl Unkraut
Denny's Mother	-	Lillian Beck
Nick Dowd		Jack Hopkins
Black Bart		Bert Crawford
Deacon Barnwell		Pete Raymond
Molly - his daughter		Selma Kinmar
John Collins		John Woodford

Denny Mack is to be given the chance to ride - and Sunny Sue, a prime favorite, and thoroughbred, is the horse. Given his colors Denny prepares for the event.

Black Bart and his Pal, Nick Dowd call on Denny to make a deal which would result in their cleaning up on the race, but before Denny can answer, his mother appears on the scene, and at the point of a gun, drives them from the premises, while Denny declares he will win fairly or not at all.

When the eventful day arrives, Bart and Nick scheme to send Denny a telegram advising him that his Mother has met with a serious accident and want him to come home, but as the race is to start and Denny is already on his mount, he sees in the crowd, his mother and Molly.

Molly is his sweetheart - they are very much in love - but Molly's father, Deacon Barnwell, loudly voices his opinion on racing and jackkeys, with the result that the loving pair have little opportunity together. BUT Just before the race starts Deacon Barnwell slyly places a bet on Sunny Sue, feeling confident that his secret is safe.

They're off! Amid the cheers and enthusiasm of the crowd of sight-seers, Denny rides to victory! Bart's scheme has failed - Sunny Sue, has run true to form.

Mrs. Mack rushes proudly to her boy. Denny, equally proud tells her that when he saw her in the stand he knew he would win - and win fairly.
